Jefferson County Manufactured Housing Association (Amicus Curiae) submits this brief as amicus curiae in support of Appellant in this matter.

SUMMARY OF AMICUS CURIAE

Amicus Curiae is an unincorporated association of 26 owners and operators of manufactured home communities located in Jefferson County, Missouri.¹ The statute at issue, §§ 700.525 to 700.541,² provides a means to clear title to manufactured homes that their owners have abandoned. Owners and operators of manufactured home communities have an interest in the statute because abandoned manufactured homes create a burden on their communities, and the statute provides a means to alleviate that burden.

POINT RELIED ON

THE CIRCUIT COURT ERRED IN HOLDING §§ 700.525 TO 700.541 UNCONSTITUTIONAL, BECAUSE THE STATUTE DOES NOT OFFEND DUE PROCESS, IN THAT THE STATUTE PROVIDES FOR ADEQUATE NOTICE AND OPPORTUNITY TO BE HEARD AND IS AN EFFECTIVE MEANS TO PREVENT LENDERS FROM LEAVING ABANDONED MANUFACTURED HOMES IN COMMUNITIES WITHOUT PAYMENT OF RENT.

Varble v. Whitecotton, 190 S.W.2d 244 (Mo. banc 1945)

ARGUMENT

The members of Amicus, and others similarly situated throughout the state, provide land for housing to a significant number of Missouri residents. According to U.S. Census data, manufactured homes account for an estimated 192,415 housing units in the state, or 7.9 percent of the total—second only to detached single-family homes. 2000 Census, Profile of Selected Housing Characteristics: 2000, Missouri, Table QT-04, U.S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census; Varble v. Whitecotton, 190 S.W.2d 244, 246 (Mo. banc 1945) (Supreme Court will take judicial notice of the official records of the census). Many of those homes are located in manufactured home communities.

None of Amicus' members, nor anyone else similarly situated, was a party to the proceedings in the Circuit Court. The Circuit Court, without holding an evidentiary hearing on Respondent's factual allegations, found that §§ 700.525 to 700.541 violated the due process clause of the U.S. Constitution and were impermissibly vague, and the Court enjoined their further administration. In so holding, the Circuit Court erred, to the detriment of the owners and operators of manufactured home communities.

The land on which such communities are located is typically improved with streets, concrete pads for homes, parking pads, and water pipes, sewer lines, and electrical wiring to each home site. Community owners furnish and maintain those improvements. Owners of manufactured homes pay rent to place their homes on the concrete pads. The economic viability of these communities depends on the homeowners' continuous payment of rent, without which community owners can not maintain desirable communities and earn reasonable returns on their investments. The judgment of the Circuit Court, if allowed to stand, threatens that economic viability, because the judgment deprives community owners of an effective means to collect rent from lenders, such as Respondent (Legal File [L.F.] at 13), whose borrowers have defaulted and abandoned their homes. If rents do not produce a reasonable return on investment, people will not improve and maintain real estate for manufactured home communities.

Financing the purchase of a manufactured home differs from financing the purchase of all other housing, because a manufactured home is not fixed to real estate and therefore is personalty. The lender takes a lien on the home to secure the purchaser's debt, §§ 700.350 et seq., but has no interest in the land on which the home is placed. For homes located in manufactured home communities, the community owner enters into a contract with the homeowner, providing for the payment of rent in return for the use of the land on which the home is placed. In the event of a homeowner's default on his or her obligation to the lender, the lender has no contractual duty to the community owner, and is free to leave the abandoned home in place. In that event, the community owner is burdened with the abandoned home, which is subject to burglary or vandalism and therefore is potentially an attractive nuisance for area children and an eyesore. Abandoned homes generally degrade the community.

Abandoned homes are in the lender's control, whether or not foreclosure has occurred. If the lender does not remove an abandoned home from the community and does not pay rent to the community owner, then the lender is imposing the burden of that home on the community owner without compensation. The statute at issue provides a means for community owners to seek relief in such situations. The Circuit Court has taken away that means without hearing from the persons most affected.

Sections 700.525 to 700.541 provide a procedure for a community owner to take possession of and title to an abandoned home. The owner must file an application and affidavit with the Director of Revenue. § 700.527.2. The Director must give notice to the homeowner and the lender(s). § 700.531. The homeowner or the lender(s) may defeat the community owner's request for possession and title by proving ownership and paying the reasonable rent due. § 700.533. Otherwise, if the owner has requested a title and has complied with the statute, the Director shall issue a new certificate of title to the owner. § 700.530. A title issued to the owner is subject to the lender's security interest, if the lender has paid the reasonable rent due. §§ 700.527.1, 700.530, 700.533. If the lender has affirmatively relinquished its rights or failed to respond to the Director's notice, the title issued to the owner is free from the lender's security interest. § 700.535.³ Fundamentally, this statutory scheme forces a lender to fish or cut bait—either to pay the community owner's reasonable rent if the lender wishes to leave the home in place and preserve its lien or to allow the community owner to take over control of the home that was abandoned on his or her property.

The general assembly did not authorize the retitling of abandoned manufactured homes in a vacuum. It acted to prevent the appropriation, without compensation, of the use of community owners' property. Without a mechanism for retitling, community owners will unfairly bear a financial burden when lenders' underwriting decisions (which community owners do not influence) turn out to have been unwise.

This is not a trivial problem for community owners. This Court may take judicial notice of the fact that bankruptcy filings are markedly increasing. Elder v. Delcour, 269 S.W.2d 17, 19 (Mo. banc 1954) (Courts may take judicial notice of matters of common knowledge). Inevitably, some of those filers are manufactured home owners. And clearly, large numbers of consumers outside of bankruptcy are unable to meet their obligations as they come due. To the extent that Respondent is leaving abandoned homes in communities without payment of rent, Respondent is simply appropriating the use of those communities for itself. The fact that Respondent is maintaining this action indicates that Respondent is doing exactly that, since payment of reasonable rents due is the only burden the statute places on Respondent if Respondent wishes to maintain control of an abandoned home.

Respondent's position is that the statute in question—§§ 700.525 to 700.541—confiscates Respondent's property without due process. Respondent is telling the story backwards. The statute is the only effective tool to prevent Respondent and similarly situated lenders from confiscating the use of community owners' property without compensation. The Circuit Court erred in finding that notice under the statute is inadequate, particularly in light of the fact that Respondent does not allege that it has not received the Director of Revenue's notices. To the contrary, Respondent clearly has received those notices. Due process requires only that notice be reasonably calculated in the circumstances to inform interested parties and give them an opportunity to present their objections. Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 314 (1950). Sections 700.525 to 700.541 meet that standard.

There is a strong presumption that statutes are constitutional. Courts will not invalidate a statute "unless it clearly and undoubtedly contravenes the constitution and plainly and palpably affronts fundamental law embodied in the constitution." Smith v. Coffey, 37 S.W.3d 797, 800 (Mo. banc 2001) (emphasis added; quotation marks and citations omitted). Respondent did not meet that burden in the Circuit Court.

CONCLUSION

The Circuit Court erred in finding §§ 700.525 to 700.541 contrary to the U.S. Constitution and enjoining further administration of the statute. For the foregoing reasons, in addition to those advanced by Appellant, this Court should reverse the judgment of the Circuit Court and order the Court to enter judgment upholding the statute.

Respectfully submitted,
